Baruntse Peak Climbing - 32 Days

BARUNTSE PEAK CLIMBING: 32 DAYS EXPEDTION

Baruntse Peak stands as one of the renowned 7000m summits available for climbing in Nepal's Khumbu region. Having already completed Mera Peak, Island Peak, and Lobuche Peak, you are well-positioned to begin your 7000m climbing objectives with Baruntse Peak (7162m). Located in the Khumbu region of eastern Nepal, Baruntse is distinguished by four peaks and bordered by the Hunku Glacier to the south, the Barun Glacier to the east, and the Imja Glacier to the northwest. The mountain is widely regarded as an excellent preparatory peak in the Himalayas for mountaineers preparing for eight-thousander expeditions; nevertheless, it maintains a relatively low success rate due to its technical complexity, steep terrain, and unpredictable weather patterns. Although accessible to beginners, the climb requires the use of fixed ropes. The standard approach is from the south, where climbers can summit Mera Peak for acclimatization before proceeding up the valley to Baruntse base camp. It represents an ideal mountain to tackle before attempting 8000m peaks. Our 32-day Baruntse Peak expedition commences with a scenic flight to Lukla and a trek to Khare, following the Mera Peak climbing route through Chutanga, Zatrawa La, Thuli Kharka, Khote, and Thangnak. This route offers a serene, less-crowded trekking experience along the Hinku Valley. Following your arrival at Khare, you will commence the full expedition to Mera La Pass before heading toward Khongma Dingma.

Baruntse Peak was first summited on May 30, 1954, when Colin Todd and Geoff Harrow of a New Zealand expedition under Sir Edmund Hillary's leadership successfully ascended via the south ridge. The East Ridge saw its inaugural ascent on April 27, 1980, accomplished by Spanish climbers Lorenzo Ortas, Javier Escartín, and Jeronimo Lopez, alongside American climber Carlos Buhler, as part of a Spanish expedition directed by Juan José Díaz Ibañez. A 1994 first ascent of the North West face of Baruntse North by Vladimir Leitermann, Martin Otta, and Tomas Pekarek earned a Piolet nomination. The west face was first climbed in 1995 by a Russian team led by Valeri Pershin

(climbing leader), featuring climbers Evgeni Vinogradski, Salavat Habibulin, Nikolai Zhilin, and Yuri Ermachek, who completed the ascent in seven days and reached the summit in October. In 2004, Simone Moro, Bruno Tassi, and Denis Urubko achieved the first ascent of Ciao Patrick (V+/VI M6+ 90°) on the northwest face and northwest ridge of Baruntse North (7,057m), an alpine-style achievement recognized as among the year's most significant ascents. Becky Bellworthy from the United Kingdom made history in 2010 by becoming the youngest woman to reach Baruntse's summit at age 18. Sherpa Nomad Trek Pvt.
